he same order of debarkation from train was observed here and in Washington. All waited in their seats until Mrs. McKinley had left the train. As in journey from Buffalo to Washington and her party rode in the car Olympia which was immediately in front of the caree car, the Pacific being the last car in the train. The President and his brother-Lieutenant-Commander Cowles, ocoupied alone the car Edgemere, which was immediately in front of the Olympia. Like the others the President waited until Mrs. McKinley and her party had reached

Mrs. McKinley, in fact, was the first to step from the train. She was sup-ported by Abner McKinley and Dr. Rixey. Breause of her heavy black yell not a ause of her heavy black veil not a dimpse of her upon her attendants' arms and her head and shoulders were bowed as though the very weight of her grief were literally bearing her down. frail, stricken figure was so pitful as she moved across the platform that there was a low murmur of sympathy from those who were kept back under the line of the overhanging station roof. All heads were provered as she passed.

One man with hard, set face said in a voice which, although low, was startlingly audible in the silence to those nearby: "Oh God, it's awful, awful; that beast' second victim. He struck her down, too." For an instant the almost tearful sympathy that was in the faces of the men nearby who heard this blazed up into rage, but as quickly went back to sympaths again, and there were tears in many eyes as the afflicted woman was assisted into her carriage and driven quickly away up the street lined with soldiers. She was to go once to her home, the house she had at once to her home, the house she had by her side and in the full vigor of his man-

THE PUNERAL PROCESSION

There was still a further delay before the President, the members of the Cabinet, the army and navy officers and the others who were on this section of the train alightd. They waited until the coffin was removed and that was rather a long process. First wagons were driven up to the rear of the car and upon them were carefully loaded the great mass of wreaths and floral pieces that had been placed in the rotunda of the Capitol yesterday when the tens of thousands of Washington's citizens filed through to take their last look at the dead sident's face.

While this was being done, employees were busily engaged in loosening the fastening of the window in the side of the car through which the coffin must be passed. Then the soldiers and the sallors who had stood guard over it alternately, standing erect on each side and one at the foot and at the head during all the long night ride from Washington, filed out the front of the car and took their places to receive the burden as it was passed through the window and lowered to their shoulders. Then ident Roosevelt and all the members of represented by Assistant Secretary Hill, formed in line behind the coffin. President velt walked with Lieutenant-Commander Cowles and immediately behind them came Secretaries Root and Gage. ing. Secretary Hitchcock and Postmaster-General Smith, Secretary Long and Assistant Secretary Hill, Secretary Wilson and Mr. Cortelyou. The coffin, covered with an American flag and with flowers, was borne on the shoulders of the soldiers and sailors from the east to the west end of the plat form and around the station to the rear. where the hearse was standing.

Following the President and members of the Cabinet had come, all in full uniform with their aides, and Rear Admiral O'Neil and other officers of the navy. They wore wide crepe mourning badges on their left arms and all heads were bared as the little procession filed along the station platform and until the coffin was in the

Then the hearse moved a short distance shead and the carriage of Mrs. George D. Harter, with coachman and footman is livery, came up and President Roosevelt and Lieutenant-Commander Cowles entered it. During the short wait for the carriage, the President, dressed in black throughout, had carried a gray Raglan on his arm. The air was keen and cold, good mid-October weather, and a startling contrast to the oppressive humid heat of Washington yesterday. Several persons came up and urged the President to put on his coat. A dislike for overcoats to a fixed habit with President Roosevelt, but at last he yielded to entreaty and put on the gray coat.

Troop A of Cleveland, the same fine company of horse, made up of prominent young men of Cleveland, which acted as President McKinley's bodyguard at both his inaugurations, moved ahead in front of the hearse. Two regiments of the Ohio National Guard, the First and the Eighth. were lined up in two streets leading to the station. A band led the entire line, while the carriages of the President, members of the Cabinet and the army and navy officers followed behind the hearse. Be hind the carriages came the two regiments of militia, spendid bodies of men, almost as trim in appearance and firm in alignment as Regulars. As the line got in motion the band struck up the late President's favorite hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee, and at the slowest marching pace the funeral procession moved through streets lined with sad faced people to the Court House where the body lay in state this afternoon and evening.

AT THE COURT HOUSE.

In neither Buffalo nor Washington were the mourning drapings of the buildings so Impressive as those here in Canton. Court House in particular was very impressive. From its tall clock tower to its base the impression given was of one great mass of black, following the handsome form of the building until it seemed a very dirge in architectural outlines.

As the hearse stopped at the foot of the imposing flight of steps that lead up to the rotunda and the coffin was taken from it and borne upon the shoulders of sailors and soldiers to the catafalque under the dome where it was to rest, hundreds of people were openly weeping, men as well as women and some of the latter sobbing For the thousands who, for hours had been standing here patiently waiting for this solemn moment the sight of the coffin seemed to bring home with terrible force the great loss that had come to them, and their emotion got beyond all

The interior drapings of the corridors and rotunds of the Court House were arranged with much artistic taste, and well conveyed the idea of genuine grief which is now so overwhelmingly dominant in the late President's old home. The marble walls and ceiling made what seemed almost a vault of black.

LAST VIEW OF THE BODY.

placed in the hearse which was waiting light, turned by a reflector to the face of the dead President immediately below it The effect this evening with the thousands of people filing by was solemn and impressive. In proportion to the size of the town, the number of those who formed in line to take a farewell look at Presidnt McKinley's face was even larger there than in Washington. When the doors were thrown open the line extended back from the Court House for what would amount to at least ten of New York up and downtown city blo and it grew rather than diminished as the hour for closing approached.

The crowd was kept in admirable order. It was determined to have no repetition of such scenes of stampede and terror a ecurred on the steps of the Capitol at Washington yesterday. On each side of the line throughout its entire length there stretched cordons of National Guardsmen. There was no breaking through them; no massing of disorganized throngs about The the foot of the Court House steps. only way to get into the procession was to go to its extreme end and there take your place. Without a break for over five hours the people filed by in a double line.

TARRY TO THE M'EINLEY HOME. When 6 o'clock came the doors were closed and the body prepared for removal to the old home at the corner of beautifu North Market street and Lewis avenue, o which President McKinley was so fond. and about which and about the rest he so longed for the President in his delirium spoke so frequently as he lay dying in Buffalo. It was at Mrs. McKinley's own request that this arrangement was made. wished to have her husband's body rest during its last night on earth in the house he had loved so well and under the root where she and he had passed so many days that were happy.

All other prearranged plans gave way o this and to-night Mrs. McKinley is in her own home and alone with her dead. It was the very graceful thought of those who were in charge here to leave the house without an emblem of mourning upon itto leave it the same bright, cheerful home it was when so short a time ago the President went away from it, little dreaming that he was going away from it as a living man forever. So not a mourning emblem was put out, not even crèpe upo the door. The gardener, Bailey, for days has been trimming the lawns and brightening the flower beds that all might loo at its best and cheeriest when Mrs McKinley saw it again He was there at the gate to greet her when she and Dr. Rixey and Mr. Abner McKinley drove up to the gate. long before the procession escorting the body had started from the station. whole block, one of the beautiful residence blocks in the city, was in deepest mourning At the corner of North Avenue, the next street to Lewis avenue, where the McKinley house stands, the carriage passed under an arch of black. At the Lewis avenue crossing was still another. All the houses between were draped in black, and from each one of them trailed a large American flag, its folds bound with crepe. The effect of the bright flowers anti green lawn the Cabinet save Secretary Hay, who was and the cheerful looking McKinley home without an emblem of sorrow upon it was peculiarly striking in all this gloom. Probably in all Canton it is the only house which does not bear some badge of mourn-

Mrs. McKinley, Mr. and Mrs. Abner McKinley and Mr. Cortelyou are there to night and Dr. Rixey very likely will stay here. Mrs. McKinley's condition still continues to be a problem. The way she has borne up thus far is a marvel, but what the effect will be when the stimulus of th excitement is over is something that causes those about her much anxiety. At times it is said she seems not to realize what and respiendent with gold lace, Gens. has happened. She now and then refers to her husband as though he were still alive. Yet at other times she shows that she knows it all. She was weeping and sobbing, with her handkerchief to her eyes under her thick mourning veil, when she was assisted from the railroad train to the carriage to-day.

It was the two Grand Army of the R public poets of Canton which escorted the body of the President to the house at 6 'clock this evening, and they will escort it from the house to the church to-morrow morning. The coffin, when it was closed in the Court House rotunds this evening. was closed for the last time. It was thought advisable to close it at 6 o'clock instead of as had been at first arranged. It was even believed by many who saw it in Washington yesterday that the coffin would not be opened at all to-day.

FUNERAL PLANS FOR TO-DAY. The arrangements for the funeral services o begin at 1:30 o'clock to-morrow afternoon are simple in outline. It was the special request of the family that they be made as short as possible. Also, by the wish of the family , only one address will be delivered, that of the Rev. Dr. Manchester, pastor for the past five years of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, in which services are to be held. The Rev. O. B. Milligan, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, in which the President and Mrs. McKinley were married thirty years ago, will offer the opening prayer. Dr. John Hall, pastor of the Trinity Latheran Church, who participated in the memorial service on Sunday, is to read the first scriptural lesson, and the Rev. E. P. Herbruck of the Trinity Reformed Church the second. He has been invited to pronounce the benediction.

The Euterpean Quartet will sing "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere." It was arranged for a quartet by F. S. Manchester. quartet is composed of Misses Harrist Levinger, first soprano; Jeanette Bauhof. first alto; Katherine Bachrens, second alto; Fannie Levinger, second soprano. A mixed quartet composed of three singers of the Trinity Lutheran Church quartet and Director R. M. Brown of the First M. E. Choir, will render the late President's favorite hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light." The quartet will be Miss Rachael Frease, soprano; Mrs. Elizabeth Frease Smith. contralto; Mr. R. M. Brown, tenor, and Mr. Frank J. Melbourne, basso.

The church itself is impressively decorated. On the front interior of the edifice there stretches from wall to wall and over the organ front paneled drapery work in nuns' veiling, 52 feet long and 15 feet The panels are formed with white satin ribbons two inches wide. The choir loft railing is hung with nuns' veiling arranged in festoons with silk drapery tassels between the festoons. The pulpit rostrum is heavily covered with black cloth and the pulpit itself is draped with rich silk crèpe. An excellent portrait of the late President is fastened to the front of the pulpit and is gracefully draped. The chancel rail, and practically all of the wood work about the front of the church, a mass of black Five seats from the front of the pulpit in the left middle aisle is the pew which was occupied by President McKinley when he attended services. It is covered with heavy black crèpe.

The side walls of the church are hung with streamers and the overhanging arches the great rotunds chandeller, itself with black streamers and festoons. The pillars between the church auditorium proper and the Sunday school room appear in a stately black garb, relieved every five feet with narrow bands of white silk wound about them. The belcony front is heavily draped and hung with fe tied with white silk drapery tassels. The points of vantage on the exterior and the tower are draped in black and white. The church will be kept open to-mo row afternoon and evening and until noon on Friday so that the thousands of those who come here to do honor to the late President and who for lack of room in church will not be able to attend the funeral services, may at least see where they

From the church the body will be taken to the West Lawn Cemetery, where it will be placed in a vault and then guarded for a time by soldiery, presumably by United States infantrymen, as was the vault in View Cemetery, Cleveland, where the coffin of President Garfield was temporarily placed.

THE PROCESSION TO-DAY. The procession from the church to the cametery will be very imposing. In addition to scores of civic societies and representatives of Ohio municipalities there will be practically the entire National Guard of Ohio, some six thousand men, led by Gov. Nash and his staff and Major-Gen. Dick. The procession will be composed of seven divisions as follows:

First Division, Gen. Eli Torrence, Na tional Commander G. A. R., commanding. and staff-G. A. R. band; E. F. Taggart, detachment commander G. A. R. of Ohio and staff; Canton Post No. 25, Canton, Ohio; Buckley Post No. 12, Akron, Ohio; Bell Harmon Post No. 86, Warren, Ohio; C. G. Chamberlain Post No. 36, East Palestine, Ohio; Given Post No. 133, Wooster, Ohio; Hart Post No. 134, Massillon, Ohio, and other Grand Army posts.

Second Division, Major-Gen. Charles Dick commanding-Eighth Regiment Military band, detachment Ohio National Guard, Troop A of Ohio National Guard; guard of honor, officiating clergymen, funeral car and bearers, honorary bearers, special guard of honor, Gen. Nelson A Miles, Admiral George Dewey, Gen. John R. Brooke, Gen. Elwell Otis, Gen. George Gillespie, President's Regiment, Loyal egion, family, President and Cabinet, President of Senate and United States Senators, Speaker and Members of House of Representatives, Governors of States with staffs, Gen. Leonard Wood, Governor of Cuba; Ohio State officials, Circuit Court Judges, State of Ohio; Gov. McKin ley's former staff officers, Federal officials of Cleveland, Federal officials of Chicago, Federal officials of Canton, Federal officials of Massilion, Board of Directors of Pan-American Exposition, board of Cook county officials, Chicago. Third Division, Major A. Vignos com manding—Gate City Guards of Atlanta, Ga., Cleveland Grays, Cleveland Scots Guards, William McKinley Command, Spanish-American War Veterans, Sons of Veterans, Union Veteran Legion, Canton Encampment, No. 94.

Fourth Division, A. B. Foster, Grand Commander of Ohio, commanding Knights Templar, Grand Lodge of Ohio, Eagle Lodge of Canton, Canton Lodge of Canton and other Masonic lodges.

The remaining three divisions are made up of representatives from clubs, societies, civic bodies and the Eighth and Second Regiments of National Guards, together with such other military organizations as may report here in time for alignment. A camp capable of providing for 1,000 men has been established in the outskirts of the city and there is a general military atmosphere about the town such as has not been seen since the Spanish war.

CANTON, Ohio, Sept. 18 - The funeral train from Washington was made up in three sections. The first was preceded over the entire line by a pilot engine. In the first section were a number of Congressmen, the committee of Cubans and the ewspaper representatives. In the second and third sections were the following:

Mrs. McKinley and maid, Mr. and Mrs Abner McKinley, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Duncan, Miss Helen McKinley, Mrs. M. C. Barper, Miss Mary Barber, John D. Barber, Dr. and Mrs. Herman L. Baer, and maid; Lieut James McKinley, Miss Sarah Dunoan, Capt. and Mrs. La Fayette McWilliams. William Duncan, Jack Duncan, Frank Osborne, Mrs. Seward Bowman, Mrs. Garrett A. Hobart, son and maid; Mrs. M. A. Stafford, Dr. and Mrs. P. M. Rixey, Comptroller Charles Dawes, Col. C. F. Meek Col. W. C. Brown, Major Charles R. Miller, Burt A. Miller, Miss McKenzle and Miss Hunt, nurses Mrs. Matthews, Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Schell, Mrs. Rand, Mrs. Dawes. Mrs. J. A. Porter, President Theodore Roosevelt, Secretary of War Elihu Root, Attorney-General Knox, Postmaster-General and Mrs. Smith, Secretary of the Navy Long, Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock and Mrs. Hitchcock. Secretary of Agriculture Wilson and Miss Wilson, Secretary to the President Cortelyou and Mrs. Cortelyou, Col. Benjamin D. Montgomery, Assistant Secretary B. F. Barnes M. C. Latta, John G. Milburn, John M. Scatherd, Conrad Diehl, Harry Hamlin and Carlton Sprague, representing the city of Buffalo and the Pan-American Exposition; Major Thomas W. Symond, United States Army; ex-Postmaster-General James A. Gary and Mrs. Gary, ex-Secretary Cornelius N. Bliss, Senator Hanna and Secretary Dover, Senators Fairbanks and Kean: Representative H. B. McFarland, president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia; Gen. Brooke and Capt. J. T. Dean, aide; Gen. Michael V Sheridan, Col. T. A. Bingham, Capt. Harry Leonard, Gen. Harrison G. Otis, H. H. Kohlsaat, A. M. Aaron, committee of five representing the G A. R. bodyguard of wo officers and sixteen men. The first section of the train left Washington at 8 o'clock in the evening and the econd and third at intervals of fifteen minutes. In the second section was the car Pacific, with the body of the late Presi dent, the Olympia, with Mrs. McKinley and her party, the Edgemere, with the President and Lieutenant-Commander Cowles; the Naples and Belgravia, with the members of the Cabinet, Senators Hanna and Fairbanks, and a number of others. All along the route the remarkable demonstrations of sorrow, which characterized the trip from Buffalo to Washington, were duplicated in even a more striking manner, especially in that part of the journey between Pittsburg and Canton. Although it was so late as 8 o'clock in the evening when the first section started, people thronged every station all the way to Baltimore and at Baltimore, which was reached by the first section a little before 9 o'clock, the crowd was as large as that which greeted the funeral train from Baltimore the day before. At Harrisburg, there was another large gathering and in the dead of the night as the stations flashed by, groups hundreds of persons could be seen gathered upon the platforms and lining the track for some distance on each side

But at Pittsburg the demonstration was the most impressive of any along the route of the train, either from Ruffalo to Wash-ington or from Washington here. National guardsmen were drawn up on each side of the station, and in Pittsburg proper, and in Allegheny, not less than from 100,000 to 150,000 persons were massed along the railroad and at the street crossings. The great mills and iron works all along the line in this region were shut down that the employees might turn out and see the train pass, and this they did by the thousands. The first section of the train passed through Pittsburg without coming to a halt, but the second section, the one containing the car that served as the hearse of the stately railroad procession, stopped long enough to take on board Gov. Nash and Lieut.-Gov. Colwell of Ohio, who came with the train to

It was when the train crossed the line of Ohio at East Palestine and entered Colum-biana county in the late President's old Congress district that the evidences of the deep grief which prevails here in Canton were manifest. Here was a county where William McKinley was almost as well known personally as he was in Canton itself. There was not a country schoolhouse or a cross-roads corner, or a town, village or hamlet in which he had not spoken during his long years of political life. Every factory, store and school for miles around was closed, and every house within sight of the railroad, whether mansion or hovel, had some emblem of mourning. The spectacle of the school children from the villages, as well as the isolated country schoolhouses, drawn up with their teachers along the track, a spectacle that began away back in New York State after leaving Buffalo, was repeated over and over again.

At the stations where the train stopped people gathered about the car, as the coffin could be seen through the wide windows and invariably at sight of it there rose up a strange moaning sound of grief indescribably affecting. Men and women stood gazing at the flag-draped coffin with tears rolling down their cheeks, while some turned their heads away as though unable to bear the sight. At Alliance, where is Mount Union College, of which President McKinley was a life trustee, and where Attorney-General Knox was a student when McKinley was fighting the Republican battles of his district, there was the greatest demonstration seen at any of the smaller towns along the route. A great mourning arch spanned the street near the station and the entire town seemed literally under a pall of black as far as the eye could reach.

At Salem, a place not scheduled as stop, the train was slowed down to a snail's pace to take on board a beautiful wreath that the people wished to have placed by the President's bier.

As the train neared Canton it was seen that the people had overflowed the boundaries of the city and were lined along the track far out into the fields beyond the outskirts. At the edge of the city a stop was made to take on Judge Day, who, as chairman of the Committee on Arrangements, came to explain to President Roosevelt and the Cabinet the details of the plans that had been made. He also carried a bundle of vellow slips of paper which he handed to all the distinguished visitors and which designated to them the private bouses where they were to be the guests until after the funeral.

NO CHANGES IN THE CABINET. All of the Members Accept Reappointment - Mrs. Roosevelt Returns Home.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18. Secretary of State Hay and Secretary of the Navy Long. who remained in Washington to transact current Government business at the request of President Roosevelt, were at their desks to-day. All the members of the Cabinet have accepted the reappointments tendered to them by the President. Wilam Loeb, President Roosevelt's private secretary, was at the White House to-day tetting acquainted with the executive force and acquiring some knowledge of the details of the work there. Just what position Mr. Loeb will occupy under the new Administration is not known here. It is currently reported that President Roosevelt has asked Mr. Cortelyou, secretary to the late President, to remain with him for the present. A great many of the articles at the White House were the personal property of President and Mrs. McKinley. It is not known what disposi-personal property of President and Mrs. McKinley. It is not known what disposition will be made of these, but it is supposed that most of them will be sent to Canton.

Mrs. Roosevelt returned to-day to her home at Oyster Bay, N. Y., where she will make preparations for coming to Washington to live.

The catafalque on which rested the remans of Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley was stripped of its drapery to-day and removed to the crypt of the Capitol building, where it had been kept for the twenty years since the body of President Garfield lay in the rotunda. The black broadcloth and the tassels and fringe which covered it yesterday will, according to custom, be cut into small pieces and given to Senators, Rrepresentatives and other public officials as souvenirs.

A pew in the tiny chapel of Grace German Reformed Church, corner of Fifteenth and O streets, has been set apart for the use of President Roosevelt, who has notified the pastor, the Rev. John H. Schick, that he will attend services there during his residence in Washington. The church has accommodations for only 150 people, and Mr. Schick said to-day that he could not take advantage of the death of President McKinley to build up his church. This was with reference to the fact that he had received many letters from clergymen and others urging him to press the matter of a new building. It had already been contemplated to build a new structure, and pledges for $10,000, or almost one-third of the cost, had been given.

For five minutes to-day, at the approx-

mate time at which the body of President

McKinley will be consigned to its last resting place in the cemetery at Canton, almost the whole business life of this great city and its suburbs will stop in silent tribute to the man whose death by the assassin's bullet t the post of duty has shocked the world n Chicago and in several other cities New York's example in this respect will be followed. Such a tribute has never before been paid to the memory of any great man. Street cars, steamboats, several rail roads, including the Jersey Central and Long Island road and ferry lines, the Commercial Cable company's cables and land lines here and in Canada, the British lines and in France, most of the few workshops remaining in operation for the day will all cease business from 3:30 to 3:35 o'clock. The car lines alone of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, the North Jersey Traction Company and the New York and Queens County, Railway Company cover many hundreds of miles. The Jersey portation in the cities of Newark, Elizabeth and Bayonne, and in Jersey City and the Oranges. On all these lines at the moment appointed the cars will stop wherever they may happen to be. In the power houses too, work will cease and passengers and employees will have an opportunity to think of the scene being enacted at that ime in distant Ohio.

With every passing hour other evidences of the widespread desire to show by some direct act the general and personal regret and sorrow over the murder of President McKinley multiplied yesterday, as they had done the day before.
